

Meet Tom Rainsberger, Project Manager/Estimator

Tom Rainsberger has always been good with his hands, whether he was helping his dad repair cars or creating artistic drawings. The Project Manager/Estimator for Geotech Services, Inc. has never been afraid to roll up his sleeves and dive into a project. It's a trait that has served him well throughout his 9 years with the company.

Rainsberger began in 2007 as a laborer and moved into his current position in 2011. Today he helps the company find and bid work. He also pitches in as a field supervisor when the workload is heaviest and an extra pair of hands is needed.

Tom jokes that he wears a lot of hats for Geotech Services but adds that he considers himself a 'jack of all trades and master of none'. "If I don't know how to do something I just work at it until I figure it out," he says. "I've learned a lot that way and I love jumping in wherever I'm needed to get something done."

A graduate of North Canton Hoover High School, Rainsberger's penchant for everything mechanical led him to an early work experience as an operator/mechanic with an electrical contracting company in the Bahamas. Some might wonder why he migrated north to Ohio after that experience, but we at Geotech Services are pleased that he did. Tom has always been one of the team we could count on in the field or in the office.

"I love the diversity of work that we do here," Tom adds. "I'm a problem solver and there I always something different I can dive into every day. It's a perfect situation for me."

His attraction to diversity is reflected in his creative hobby, as well. Unlike some illustrators who stick to their specialty, Tom dabbles in pencil, charcoal and airbrush art. He also enjoys sports of all kinds, especially bowling and baseball.

Rainsberger is the father of four (Morgan Sydney, Jake, and Isabelle).
